Q

We are not estate agents – although we do work with a trusted few on a regular basis. Our primary role is to help you navigate the many pitfalls that can occur when assessing a valued site. Plus, we've got the expertise and experience of dealing with a range of national, regional and local house builders, so if you're thinking of selling, we can often introduce you to a serious buyer.

HELPING YOU NAVIGATE
THE BEST WAY FORWARD

What types of sites are of interest?

We recently worked behind the scenes on a straightforward house sale that evolved into a subject-to planning offer that will see 26 private properties built on a single piece of land – we’re sure you’ll agree, that’s a significantly more profitable result for the landowner.

And whether your site is considerably bigger or you own a parcel of land that is more modestly-sized, it really is worth getting in touch for a no-obligation assessment.

EVERY SITE IS UNIQUE

Currently, many shapes and sizes of land are in demand – from uniquely-shaped parcels that often suit bespoke properties in densely populated areas, to large, open plots more suited to mixed use developments. Gardens, office buildings and commercial properties are all also desirable.

Brownfield, Greenfield and Strategic Land all have potential for any number of prospective uses – from residential housing and care homes through to retirement developments and affordable housing.

It pays to seek advice – from a trusted expert like Quealy & Co. Land & New Homes – as even plots that might seem quirky or undesirable can be surprisingly sought-after.

We’re sensitive to the needs of those thinking of selling land in close proximity to their homes and neighbours. So we’ll work in partnership with you, carry out community consultations when necessary, and clearly explain the process to help you achieve the level of planning consent you require to secure a sale.

“It really is worth getting in touch for a no-obligation assessment.”

Will I have to pay extra taxes?

It depends on your circumstances. At the moment, in most cases any profit made from the sale of a Private Principal Dwelling (or part of it) is tax free. However, Capital Gains Tax may apply if you sell a property that you don't live in.

It's worth bearing in mind that many within the industry are predicting the introduction of a land tax of up to 40% at some point in the near future – so it may well be worth your while to act quickly to reap the full rewards of a windfall.

DISCREET SERVICE

What's involved in the process?

There's no doubt that the various stages of the planning process can be complex and difficult to navigate - especially for those getting involved for the first time. Similarly, working to given timescales is an important consideration.

The following flow chart simplifies the process, and it's worth pointing out that you should familiarise yourself with the credentials of the experts you'll work with at each stage. It pays to ensure that these experts can demonstrate a detailed and up-to-date awareness of the current process and of the skills required to secure a suitable and profitable Planning Consent.

“Submitted planning? Awaiting a decision? Been refused? Consented? We can help.”

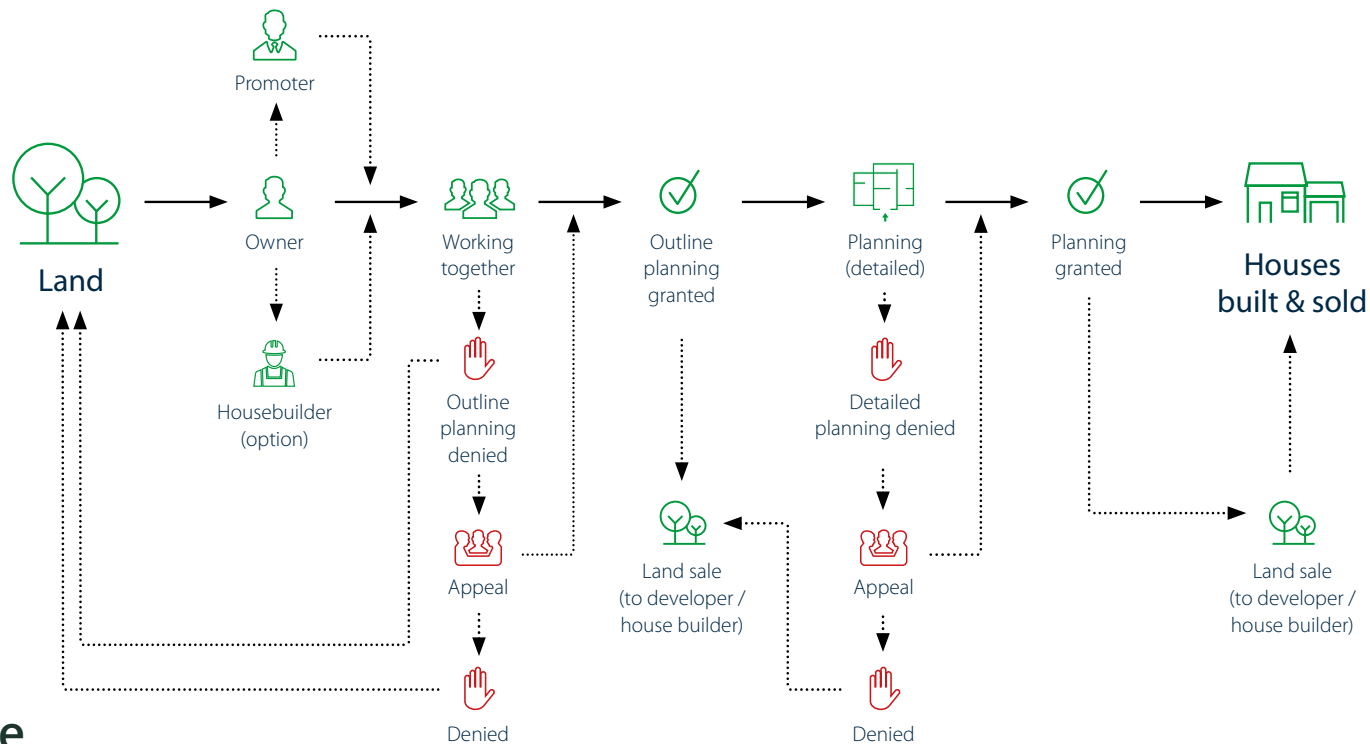

If you own a property or piece of land that may have potential, we can help you navigate the planning system (if necessary) and negotiate with possible partners such as house builders. We can also offer advice and insight that will help you maximise its value.

We are adept at adding value for our clients at any stage of this process. Submitted planning? Awaiting a decision? Been refused? Consented? We can help.

CREATING VALUE

From land to home

Stages of the planning system

What part does planning Play?

Land tends to be offered for sale in one of three ways:

- 1) With Planning Consent
- 2) Without Planning Consent
- 3) Subject to Planning Consent

When a piece of land is sold 'Subject to Planning', the interested buyer will agree to buy the site and exchange contracts as long as they are able to secure the Planning Consent they need to develop on the land. (This agreement will be covered by what is known as either an Option or Conditional Contract – see page opposite).

So, it becomes the buyer's responsibility to submit the planning application at their own cost and when - or crucially: if - the Planning Consent is granted, the sale will be completed. And while selling a site in this manner has its risks and can be a protracted, lengthy process, it is by no means insurmountable.

Both of the other selling options are common and perfectly valid (although of the two, a site offered with Planning Consent is often the most soughtafter). Similarly, a development that suits the local buyer profile makes good business sense and furthermore, the site will be even more desirable if the Consent has made the most profitable use of the space available.

We advise land owners on the disposal of land with or without Planning Consent, and are often able to suggest improvements to existing plans which may boost a site's value and saleability. It's worth noting that bigger is not always better; our understanding of current market demands can make a big difference to your site's final asking price.

EXPERTISE & ADVICE

Negotiating Contracts

It's common for developers to employ special legal measures such as Conditional Contracts when they are speculating on a piece of land, but need Planning Consent to allow them to carry out the developments that they deem necessary. Another negotiating tool is an Option, which is more informal than a Conditional Contract and involves the developer paying the landowner a small premium to, in effect, reserve the land for future purchase.

Alternatively, there is also a (less common) Lock Out, which is an agreement between a landowner and a potential buyer that prevents the landowner from selling to anyone other than the buyer for a fixed period of time. This measure is normally used to provide the developer with an opportunity to carry out detailed investigations and surveys.

We have the expertise and experience to advise landowners on Options, Conditional Contracts or any other aspect of sales negotiation.

“With our help, you can achieve the best possible price with the least possible fuss.”

When it comes to negotiating a Conditional Contract, we can also help developers/purchasers submit the most appropriate planning application for their needs and budget. Our knowledge of the land and property development industry, and of the parties involved, enables us to offer unrivalled advice and insight. With our help, you can achieve the best possible price with the least possible fuss.
